disputes and nasty allegations in student government over the last year and worsened during the now-postponed election campaign.

According to various accounts, one candidate was wrongly accused in voice-mail messages left for students of being thrown out of a student program because of a sexual harassment complaint.

Campus officials said the government shutdown was not directed at any single student or event. But several student leaders said the action was linked partly to controversies this year surrounding a student government vice president — Jason Antebi — who was removed by the Occidental administration last month from his job as co-host of a "shock jock"-style campus radio show.

Antebi, a senior who by many accounts was one of the most powerful figures in student government, said he was notified Monday of the election campaign.
